

As part of this innovation, players now physically collide and receive collision physics, making both goalkeepers and the ball feel more responsive. Throughout the complete game simulation, the player can receive realistic collisions from the players in front of them, whether they are being tackled or being supported in a tackle. The accuracy of the collisions has been enhanced through the use of the latest integration of 3D scan technology for the accurate translation of a player's body shape to the real-life player. This allows for a more realistic collision and sends the ball flying off the pitch.

Additionally, players can receive realistic aerial collisions thanks to the 3D scanning techniques used in the development of the player's animation model, allowing for their movement to be updated in real time to reflect the player's physical build. This renders many of the previously animated and virtual elements of the game, such as the ball, to feel more authentic. The HyperMotion Technology also affects the player's animations, making them more fluid and realistic. FIFA 22 also supports the various languages used in the world. We have included Russian, Spanish, Brazilian Portuguese, French, German, Italian, Dutch, Polish, Czech, Hungarian, and Korean. If you experience any issues, please contact us at EA_Support@ea.com. New Gameplay Features Online Balance Unique user matchmaking for FIFA and other EA SPORTS titles, as well as support for leaderboards on multiple platforms.
